(Please complete the unfinished story in about 150~180 words.)

I was sitting at my desk, scrolling through my phone, when a message from my classmate popped up. It was only a few words: “Don’t do that again.” My stomach dropped.

I stared at the screen, reading it over and over. Did I do something wrong? Were they angry at me? My chest felt tight, and I could feel irritation bubbling up inside. For a moment, I almost typed back something sharp—something like, “What’s your problem?”

But then I paused.
